La Nouvelle
Maritaine,
Rue Maritaine, Vale

You can't beat a good old-fashioned Sunday roast, but as Zoe Fitch and friends discovered when they visited Cafe Amiti at La Nouvelle Maritaine, there's much more on the menu besides

WHEN my best friend, boyfriend, colleague and I went to Cafe Amiti for Sunday lunch, we left absolutely stuffed and fully satisfied. We were welcomed by Jill Sayed Ahmed, who showed us to our table in the middle of the restaurant, which was almost full with lots of happy customers tucking into their roast dinners. Jill and her husband Nour, who is the chef, took over the cafe and reopened it in July. They were determined to make it a hub for the community as well as a local dining option for residents at La Nouvelle Maritaine. A selection of meats were available from the carvery as well as all the trimmings; potatoes, gravy, carrots, sweet potato, sprouts and a special mushroom gravy. My friend Monty went for some lamb, sausage and ribs with the usual suspects on the side. She said the ribs were delicious, the meat falling off the bone and covered in a rich sauce that she couldn't get enough of. As we pointed to each delicious thing in front of us that we wanted to try, Nour served us ensuring everything was done in a very professional way. He was also very generous with his servings. I think it is quite difficult for a restaurant to offer a buffet and keep the food hot all through the service. But at Cafe Amiti they seem to have it nailed. The meat was carved and presented well, the potatoes were crispy on the outside and fluffy on the inside and steaming hot when you cut into them. Monty is quite the meat lover and couldn't believe how much she was given for such a reasonable price. Two courses - a full roast dinner and a selection of desserts - is on offer every Sunday for just £10. My colleague, Alexandra, went for beef, pork belly and a roasted onion as well as the vegetables and mushroom gravy. She said the beef was very tender and the cauliflower cheese was a nice accompaniment on the side. However, she was most impressed with the Yorkshire pudding, which she said was very substantial and had some lovely flavoured herbs sprinkled on top. My boyfriend Alex went for the pork ribs, like Monty, and agreed they were cooked perfectly and the meat just fell off the bone. He also had some southern fried chicken, which I thought was an unusual way to serve chicken for a carvery but actually looked delicious. He said it was nice and juicy with a crispy coating which he would definitely like to have again. I went for the white meats, turkey, pork belly and of course a sausage. The sausage had a bit of a tang to it, but not too overwhelmingly spicy, just nicely flavoured. The turkey was wonderful and really got me in the mood for Christmas. The pork was also lovely and well-seasoned. I'm a particular fan of cauliflower cheese and this was no disappointment, the cheese sauce was nice and rich but definitely not too much to handle. The service was very efficient and friendly. Jill and the staff were quick to ask us if there was anything we needed and if everything was OK with the food. For pudding I had hot apple pie. Alexandra went for strawberry jelly. Monty chose the chocolate fudge cake and Alex had a Christmas Yule log. Jill offered us whipped cream with each of our choices and of course we all said yes. At first we weren't sure we would be able to handle dessert after taking on such large main courses, but fear not - we polished it all off. Alexandra's strawberry jelly was nice and fruity and clearly a firm favourite as she grabbed the last one in the fridge. Sometimes I think apple pie can be a little tart, but this one wasn't at all. I could really taste the apple and Jill warmed it up for me, which gave the pastry a lovely crunch. Monty's chocolate cake was just immense. She said it was rich and moist and the chocolate icing was so soft and creamy. The chocolate fudge cake was another dessert which could have been served warm, as well as the rice pudding which was also available. Between the four of us we sampled every meat and all the trimmings on the carvery and almost all of the desserts in the refrigerator and were really impressed with it all. My friends and family know how much I like a home-cooked roast dinner on a Sunday, and something about Cafe Amiti gave me that homey feeling I enjoy so much. As well as the lovely food, kind staff and huge variety of food, the staff had made a real effort with Christmas decorations and giving the dining area a welcoming feel. From young to old, a wide variety of the community seemed to be enjoying their food with a nice cup of tea or coffee to round off the meal. There was also an option to sit at a 'natter table' where others are welcome to join you. As a first trip to Cafe Amiti, we were very impressed and it definitely won't be our last.
